Spry's chosen place were more or less intelligently extolled, Mr. Harrington put the climax on his hysterical effort to get into the convention spot light by placing Christensen's name before the house for governor, with the latter political prodigy at the very moment stalking about the theater angrily disconsolate over the fearful slaughter of his candidacy for congressman against Howell.

It was touching.

The convention gasped with unbellef for about half a minute. Chairman Sutherland's face held a look of pained surprise. Apostle Smoot, over in President Smith's box, unwound his legs and peered out around the corner of the box with a look of pity.

As the significance of the ghastly farce dawned on the convention the conglomerated mass of cat calls, yelps and howls of dirision and disgust that went up must have been exceedingly pleasant to the luckless and tactless attorney. The smirk disappeared from his face very suddenly and when the noise subsided Christensen's name was withdrawn and the announcement made that Harrington's inane effort was unauthorized. Spry was again nominated by acclamation.

The delegates almost forgave Jake Greenewald his interruptions when he arose and declared "that it wasn't the convention's fault if Harrington was a clam."

With the gag rule in force and the ludicrous record of this attorney's former appearances before conventions only too well known, the machine has probably learned its lesson sufficiently well this time to remove all danger of any more farces from this source at future conventions.

Among the grannies there is gloom, and through the clouded atmosphere that for the past seven or eight years has made the office of the attorney general of the state a curiosity, a glimmer of light appears—Mammy Breeden is out of the focus of the political spot light.

Following his nomination by the church on Tuesday, Justice McCarty will probably be returned to the supreme bench of the state by the voters this fail. About the only surprising feature of Granny Breeden's defeat at Justice McCarty's hands Tuesday is his assumption in aspiring to the supreme bench after the record he has made as attorney general. A valuable and interesting addition to the department of the public library devoted to humor would be a compilation of Granny's "3,000" opinions handed down during his turn at the state crib.

The disgust in which even the church Republicans hold the irrepressible Joseph was very evident during the convention for what few outbursts he attempted to make during the afternoon were promptly and derisively howled down by the majority of the delegates within ear shot. His regular assignment of the machine's peculiar work kept him busier than usual, so the members of the Salt Lake delegation were thereby saved a little of the embarrasment of his presence.

Apostle Smoot occupied President Smith's box during most of the convention, sitting well hidden from view. Occasionally he went back on the stage and watched his slate go down the yawping maws of his constituents to the tune of Joseph brays and the blasphemous remarks of one or two candidates who had been tricked and double-crossed by the machine. If there is another state in the union where the United States senator of a party assembled in convention would be permitted to sit through the proceedings unnoticed, unrecognized and uncalled for by the delegates, it's a long way off.

The platform committee went a mile out of of its way, under orders from the owners of the "Mouth" to get around the prohibition and local option question.

JE 30, 30

H. Alma Reiser was elected the goat of the committee on platform and resolutions. Alma had a railroad resolution and it wasn't so much what the machine did to him as the way they did it. He yelled for free speech from the convention floor and when Chairman Sutherland recognized him he wanted to know where the resolution and platform committee was meeting. Some one told him at the Federal building. He lit out on a run to get his resolution before the committee. In half an hour he was back raging mad because a search of the Federal building disclosed the fact that the committee hadn't been within four blocks of it. His resolution was finally choked off by the clause in the committee's report laying all resolutions on the table without reading before the convention.

There are a few sore spots that won't be particularly easy for the machine to heal, following the convention. The soothing salve is already being applied freely, however, in an effort to get everyone into line by November.

One of the interesting little incidents of the convention was the prolonged and tumultous applause that did not follow the nomination of Spry for governor. William was nestled in a bunch of the faithful on the stage waiting to be called forth for his little bow. Some one yelled for him and very promptly came cries of "shut up," "forget it." The convention did.
